

HIMSAR

■■■■■■■, ■■■■ ■■ ■■■■■■■■ ■■ ■■■■ — Our Story

When the night is still whispering to the valleys and the snow-capped Trishul and Nanda Devi peaks are wrapped in quiet mist, the Pahad of Almora begins to wake. It does not wake to the mechanical ring of alarms, but to the soft rustle of the bakhri (cattle shelter) and the hum of an ancient rhythm.

In Uttarakhand, they say that the day the women of the mountains rest, the hills will lose their soul. Our Didi and Bhuli (mothers and sisters) of Kumaon are the breathing heartbeat of these terraced slopes. Their lives echo the timeless local sentiment:

"■■■■■ ■■ ■■■■, ■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■"

(The women of the hills are as enduring, strong, and vast as the mountains themselves).

Long before the first golden ray hits the high ridges, the women of Almora trace narrow, rocky paths with immense grace. Their spirits are woven with folk poetry, grit, and the sweet, melancholic songs of the Ghughuti bird singing in the oak trees—"■■■■■■ ■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■ ■■■■ ■■■..." They carry the weight of the hills on their shoulders, yet their hearts sing with the joy of the seasonal Kumaoni festivals and the warmth of the mountain sun. This is where Himsar was born.

Crafted by Pure Hands

Every single jar and harvest from Himsar is a labor of this sacred mountain love, crafted purely by the hands of our Kumaoni women:

- The Ghee: Slow-churned using the traditional Bilona method over crackling wood fires in earthen chulhas. It carries the rich, warm aroma of high-altitude medicinal herbs and pure morning mist.
- The Pulses & Rice: Hand-trowelled and sowed in ancient terraced Khets, nurtured only by natural Himalayan glacial springs and mountain soil that has never tasted chemical fertilizers.
- The Honey: Harvested gently from native bee colonies tucked away in the deep oak forests of Almora, where wild wildflowers bloom untouched and pesticide-free.

Our Purpose

Their hands, though hardened by the harsh alpine winters and rocky soil, carry the softest touch of pure honesty. Because in the Pahad, farming is not a commercial industry—it is Sanskar (heritage).

Himsar was created to bridge the silence of their quiet dedication with your home. By bringing Himsar into your kitchen, you are not simply ordering organic staples; you are directly honoring the sweat of Almora's women, ensuring they receive the fair wages, dignity, and recognition they deserve. You are bringing the pure, unadulterated essence of Devbhoomi straight from a mother's blessing to your family's plate.

Himsar: Authentic. Timeless. Purely Kumaoni.
